

It's Warm, Chelsea Recap, Whitney Houston, Losing $ on the NBA
3.5.26 - Golden Bean Cafe

My #9

Ok I have a wide range of topics on my mind today we will be #covering. First up is how its 60s now in Luxembourg. I'm sitting outside a cafe in the sun writing this right now actually. Crazy how there hasn't been a technological advancement yet to combat the glare of the sun on the computer screen so you can actually see what you're doing. Maybe that's mother nature's way of fighting back and pointing out how unnatural it is to spend most of your day staring at a small glowing square. If that is her message I am ignoring it and typing on. I lost my two pairs of sunglasses this last summer and now I am remembering I need new sunnies. I'm getting off track though the main reason I brought up the nice weather was to say how bad this time of year when it's first getting warm makes me miss college whether it be Brown or Babson. The vibes on a college campus when you start getting those first warm days, the finish line is in sight, and everybody is out and about on campus are so peak. Spikeball, die, playing outside, their is just no better time to be a college student. This is my first spring as an adult and non-college student and I can confirm college spring is better than whatever this is so far. Hopefully the springs ahead change my stance but man college is the spring is so #peak.

Second bit is about the state of radio/mainstream music. You simply do not get good music on the radio. All you get is botted slop that is so obviously label pushed and made to satisfy a brainless demographic. What happened to the game I love? Since my team car here was probably put together by Henry Ford himself I'm stuck listening to the radio and it is just pathetic. That Benson Boone song, that shit ass "ordinary" song, and "where the hell is my husband" just playing on repeat for eternity. I remember being a kid riding to school with my parents and not only did you get catchy music on the radio, you got genuinely good tunes that meant something and didn't feel like auditory cardboard. Take this tweet to our left for instance. My Love is both a chart topper and an actual good piece of music no one can deny that whether you like the song or not. 20 years later people still listen to this song and enjoy it. In 20 years if I'm at the uncton and someone throws on "Where the hell is my husband" or "Beautiful things" (I had to google both of these song names btw showcasing their lack of cultural impact and significance) I'm both doubting their character and slapping them across the mouth. Music industry has turned into stream botting gimmicky slop fest. Sad.

Another headline that made waves this week in the NBA is the Atlanta Hawks having a "magic city" themed night at their arena. Magic city is a strip club. I saw that and was like damn that's pretty funny I wonder what that is gonna look like. You are gonna have some horny old guys buying hawks tickets that have NEVER watched basketball before for sure. Anyways Luke Kornet came out with a post talking about "this is disrespectful to women and not what the nba represents" blah blah blah. Bro you share the court with guys who have been charged with beating women probably once every few games and owners who were in the Epstein files. I'm not going for the "we need to protect women!" stance from this guy why don't you speak up on something that means something like not letting women-beaters into the league? This is the equivalent of Instagram infographic activism from Luke Kornet. Taking an easy low hanging fruit and masquerading as some "protector of women" over a strip club (which is whether you like it or not pretty synonymous with Atlanta) partnering with a NBA for a performance when their are far bigger issues with the NBA is #weaksauce. Pick me energy from my guy Luke Kornet. You're gonna watch these ladies shake ass at halftime and you're gonna like it.

UP THE CHELS!!!! Big fucking win from my club last night. Have a few notes from the game if you don't mind:

- Gusto get off my club man. He makes a few good plays a game but the mistakes are far more numerous. I'm not sure if this guy thinks he is like nice or something but at times he plays so nonchalant / flippant I think he genuinely thinks he's skilled with the ball. Bro you're not. Make the simple play, get the ball to our playmakers, and defend. Stop trying to clip farm YOU'RE NOT THAT GUY pal.
- Palmer was hooping and looks back to form. Shaky / quiet first half from Cole. Responded with a beautiful second half. Having him play on the wing and in the middle behind Pedro he was delivering the ball all over the pitch, distributing beautifully, and looked like he was playing at his own pace. Beautiful to see.
- I trust in Rosenoir man. Last night's game could've gone so shit after we conceded 2 minutes into the game. Speaks to the club's belief and overall mental fortitude (which I believe starts heavily with our gaffer) that we absorbed the blow and proceeded to just make sweet sweet love to Villa for the last 88 minutes of the match. This performance makes me feel so much better going forward about going down goals in matches and our ability to fight back.

- Just last week after the burnley/arsenal results, Champions League football was looking hopeless. With this result we damn near control our own destiny to get to the UCL. Feels like a jolt of energy / hope is back in the club and fanbase man its beautiful to see.
- Now lets deal with ryan reynolds weak ahh club and build some momentum
- 2nd leg Champions league semi finals fall on april 5th and 6th which is a weekend I am off. If Chelsea makes it to the semis you will see me at Stamford that weekend. PAINT LONDON BLUE!!!

Betting on the NBA is so fucking difficult man. I definitely make it more difficult by betting with my feelings instead of logic but you have so many bi polar teams in this league man. Between that and having like 4 guys being GTD every night so you never even know who will be on the court it is uphill sledding. What's that stat though? 99% of gamblers quit before they hit big? Let me stop bitching then and craft another parlay right now.

Whitney Houston is amazing. Spent like an hour last night just watching her live performances. What a talent. Gr8 youtube rabbit hole to go down. Wayne Rooney said it best in his tweet to the left here.

Wayne Rooney
@WayneRooney

Whitney has passed away. RIP u will live on forever. Cant believe it. I wanna run to u. Really cant believe this. @

2:39 am · 12 Feb 2012

15,918 RETWEETS 9,001 LIKES

Living in a landlocked country with no beach or water near me as the weather gets warm makes me realize I cannot do this when I'm older and have settled down (inshallah with a wife and kids). I will be cherishing my days at home this summer 5 minutes from the beach and utilizing that to the maximum. I have taken it for granted for too long.